The President.

The sick man of the Nation defies anxiety. It may well be believed that he dies not by the hand of man. The cruel wound which seemed not to have left a day of life in him has made and have with his system, but perils after perils has been met and overcome. The vicious fracture of the rib and its pincering splinters, the treacherous stomach, the bullet, the blood-poison, the malaria, all have failed to quench the spirit or destroy the life of the sufferer. The world has so many times thought his time had come, and seen him rise superior to the mandate of what seemed fate, that all are now prepared to see him equal to almost any crisis. The dangers from poison and prostration have seemed equal; but he shows mental vigor, physical power, and the ability to throw off the poison. The terrible experience with the parotid gland and the favorable progress from the dangers it brought are now succeeded by an absence on one of the lungs. This would be most alarming with any other patient; but what the habit of victory is to military people, so the habit of successful battling with all physical dangers is to the President.

For the above reasons, rather than because of any underestimation of the great peril from the lung abscess, we are disposed to look for a safe deliverance from this latest danger. Beyond it, we are admonished, there are lurking other foes. Pyemia is a formidable and commonly a fatal thing. Parotid and lung both bear testimony to its presence, as did the rigors of July and August. It seeks its prey in vital places, and next to the lungs the liver may be attacked.

The bulletins do not deceive anybody for they are not clever enough. Indeed, we are inclined to think the President is not as low as the concealments, evasions, and incredible statements of Dr. Bliss would make him appear. So many ugly facts have been withheld for days, and finally mentioned incidentally as being of small consequence, that the public is in constant dread of hearing some startling fact which does not really exist. It would be much better to deal with people as though they had common sense. It alarms everybody to be told that a slight fever, the "chills," three drops of blood, and a pulse of 115 to 120 are evidences that he is doing "nicely," and that he "sleeps well, awaking only at intervals of half-an-hour." The future mention of bedsores, before unheard of, and of an abscess reported only to speak of the incision made in ten days before, the lengthening and shortening of the wound to the extent of several inches, vomiting without nausea, and various frightful symptoms, lately referred to for the first time, as though they had been the subject of general conversation for weeks—these do not inspire the public with the confidence sought to be created, but are, on the contrary, fruitful of panics and distrust. The country does not believe that the President is enjoying himself, or that he is free from blood-poison, or that he has a ravishing appetite, or that he is on the high and certain road to recovery. The general belief of the people is that he is terribly prostrated; that the dreaded pyemia has long been assailing him, and is running its course, having now attacked his lungs, and that his marvelous vitality and equally marvelous hope are helping him to stand the awful siege until it shall be raised by lapse of time. They believe, too, that he is being splendidly cared for, and by none more faithfully than by the man who so tries their patience with his drawing of a long bow—Dr. Bliss.

In short, the President seems determined to get well, and all the people look longingly and hopefully, though anxiously, for that result.

The Attempted Murder of Guitau.

The assault upon Guitau was a crime which should, and doubtless will be, punished by due process of law. The intended victim is, of course, and naturally, the object of intense and universal hatred. He is hated because he attempted the death of another. The crime he sought to commit was that of willful murder. But hatred is not a virtue. The killing of Guitau by a private individual with premeditation would be willful murder, for which death is the punishment. The righteous indignation of the community toward Guitau does not for a moment justify or even palliate the attempt made to murder him on Sunday evening. If each individual is to kill whom he pleases, who shall be punished? It is the law that must punish, or else each man may be a law unto himself. The courts are not endeavoring to shield Guitau from punishment. Those who have him in custody are not his friends. The attempt at murdering him is a felony. It is an assertion of the right of private vengeance. Society is formed to put down private war, which is murder, and to throw around each man the protecting power of all, by holding each man responsible to all for his crimes. It will not be well for society when each man may at his own pleasure suspend its laws and make himself judge, jury, and executioner. In this connection it may be remarked that the letters to Guitau expressive of a wish to cut him in pieces and eat him, to torture him with hot pincers, and in various other modes to luxuriate in his lingering death are not creditable to the writers or publishers of them. Fiends like Guitau may deserve fiendish treatment, but the volunteering of men to do fiendish things is not edifying. The hangman has ever been an object of great detestation, and he but executed the law. Volunteer Jack Ketches are repulsive to all, besides being criminals themselves.

This plain words of the Constitution provide the way which offers the least chance of political profit by the President's taking of "nanny," that when the President dies new election shall be held. On the other hand, the perversion of the Constitution by which it is made out that when the President dies, or—active New York World now maintains—when he is the Vice President becomes President for the full term, is that which holds out greatest inducement to this crime—Cincinnati Gazette.

We are to understand that the President takes the ground that when a President

"LYING ABOUT LOOSE."

Some fifteen years ago the "Black Crook" was performed at Maguire's Opera-House, and the Martinetti were getting ready to appear at the Metropolitan Theatre, under the name of the "Black Crook." Each party had a right to the name of "Black Crook," and each party was bringing infringement of copyright, and suits were brought in the Circuit Court in this city. Judge Deady, of Oregon, was then holding the court, and rendered the decision in favor of the Martinetti. He says, among other things: "The principal part and attraction of the spectacle seems to be the exhibition of women in novel dress, or no dress, and in attitude of grace and beauty. The clothing is called 'Parade,' and, as witness Hamilton expresses it, consists mainly of women lying about loose—a sort of Mohammedan paradise, I suppose, with initiation grottoes and unmanly houses. To call such a spectacle a 'dramatic composition' is an abuse of language and an insult to the genius of the English drama. A menagerie of wild beasts or an exhibition of novel costume might as justly be called a dramatic composition. In my judgment an exhibition of women, lying about loose' or otherwise, is not a dramatic composition, and therefore not entitled to the protection of the copyright act."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Washingtonians at Nantucket.

Mr. Henry A. Wilson has been for some time at Nantucket, and has been very successful in his efforts to secure the abolition of the Potomac Flats. PERSONALITIES.

Mr. De Groot, French Minister at Washington, was registered in Paris Saturday.

GENERAL WILLIAM T. SHERRMAN and Colonel Richard J. Dodge, of the General's staff, are in New York.

GEORGE L. BRETTE, of the Western Electric Manufacturing Company of Chicago and New York, is in the city.

MR. GAMMETT is mentioned as one of the few political men in France. He is always at hand for a promised speech.

JOHN C. WEST, of the firm of John C. West & Co., Chicago, is in the city. He is accompanied by his wife and daughter, and is expected to stay here for some time.

WIDEN-MOORE TALKER, in his sermon on Sunday, in Brooklyn, spoke satirically of culture, and declared his firm belief in miracles.

EX-PRESIDENT ENOCH POND, of the Bangor Theological Seminary, is ninety-five years old, and says he has not had a headache in sixty-six years.

MAYOR GRUBBS, of Indianapolis, has decided that selling peanuts on Sunday is not work of charity or of necessity, and has fined a peanutman for the offense.

LOUIS H. BARNARD, the only son of Mrs. Helen M. Barnard, formerly of this city, has been elected to a full professorship in the Pennsylvania State College. He is but twenty-five years of age.

THE PRINCESS OF EGYPT, the Khedive's wife, is said to be a refined and liberal-minded woman. She received a European education, and her children are brought up by English governesses and in English ways.

JOHN BROWN, the lucky servant of Queen Victoria, has had a home built for him by his master, and is now residing in the grounds of Balmoral. He is a large square man, in the center of a lawn-like expanse, with a drive leading to him from one of the avenues.

JOHN D. SAKNEY, the evangelist, left New York for England yesterday by the Inman steamship City of Berlin. Mr. Sakney will be joined in England by his co-worker, Mr. Moody, who is now in Quebec, when an extended tour of Great Britain is contemplated.

SIN-JOHN MOWBRAY, M. P., Lady Mowbray, and Miss Mowbray, of England, who are on a pleasure trip and who will make a tour of this country, are stopping at the Arlington. Sir John says that the best time in the world to be in is in America and Switzerland, as far as he is concerned.

GENERAL JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON has written a letter expressing regret that pressing business engagements prevent him from attending the reunion of the North Carolina ex-confederate soldiers at Raleigh during the approaching State fair. He says "he could find no gratification in the world equal to that of meeting his old comrades with whom he has served in the most trying times that this century has ever known."

Governor Blackburn, of Kentucky, expresses the opinion that if the President dies Arthur will be "worse than the devil for the South." Governor Blackburn has the whole country with him in the hope that the President will get well; but as to the opinion about Arthur, it is not quite so universal. The President will get well, but as to the opinion about Arthur, it is not quite so universal.

Allowed by Law to Kill.

An Indian is the only male adult in the United States (except a Mississippi Democrat) who is allowed by law to kill as many people as he chooses. Special provisions in this respect are contained in the Apache—Denver Tribune.

Another.

There was a young doctor who lived in New York. Who completed all the time of her liver. He felt so healthy. Which a foolish young doctor did give her.

A Bad Spell.

Much of the President taken to a healthy cottage at Long Branch? The one in which he now lies appears to be suffering from a bad spell, say they. "Fountain" is a funny way to spell Franklin.—New York Sun.

Deserving of Notice.

If there is to be a war of extermination waged against the Indians the Indian agents should not be overlooked. It is quite deserving of notice, however, that the President is not a Native American.

JAMES' INTERVIEW.

The Great Drama of the Cabinet and the "Evening Star."

It will be remembered that the doctors decided a few days ago to allow the President to receive the Cabinet officers separately, and that the arrangement that there should be no conversation with the President should be made. The President, however, should assure him that there was no business requiring his attention. Accordingly Attorney-General Mayhew called first, and gave the President an assurance that there was nothing requiring his attention, and that he would be at the President's disposal at any time.
